The General Assembly passed legislation to extend any deadlines for special exceptions, special use permits, or conditional use permits. Such permits often require some significant action by a developer in order to vest the permit. Developers or landowners are required to commence new residential or commercial projects or to incur significant expenses for improvements to such project within certain timeframes so that such permits do not lapse. The Virginia Code provides for such timeframes and those deadlines were initially extended by the General Assembly to July 1, 2014. The deadlines have been extended to July 1, 2017, or longer, as agreed by the locality.

The automatic extension of such permit approvals by the General Assembly was given in response to developers and landowners who were at risk of losing their interests in a special exception, special use permit, conditional use permit, site plan, or subdivision plat approvals due to the lack of financing and decreased market demand for new housing. Financing and demand for new housing are beginning to improve; however, the conditions for new residential projects are not yet ideal.

Gresham Woods is a proposed new residential project in the City that has been affected by the housing crisis. Gresham Woods was approved under a Community Unit Plan, which is a zoning category unique to the City of Richmond but similar to a special exception, special use permit, or a conditional use permit. Under the Community Unit Plan, Gresham Woods would need to get a "Final Plan" (subdivision) by July 2014 and then building permits in order for the Community Unit Plan to remain in effect. Such requirement would mean spending tens of thousands of dollars on engineering that would essentially be wasted because the demand for new housing is not yet strong enough to bring these lots to market.

This request is for City Council to extend the filing deadline to July 1, 2017 for the submittal of the Gresham Woods Final Plan as part of the Community Unit Plan (approved in Ordinance number 2010-98-81). The request is similar to the 2010 request extending the Gresham Woods Final Plan filing deadline to July 1, 2014, that was in keeping with the General Assembly timeframes. Extending the Final Plan's filing deadline will afford the developer the same relief automatically provided by the General Assembly to other developers struggling during the ongoing housing crisis. Extending the Final Plan filing deadline will allow the developer to maintain the existing Community Unit Plan approval until the economy changes. In addition, this extension will provide the opportunity for the Applicant to collaborate and participate in the ongoing Midlothian Corridor Study. The Corridor Study is under development by the Richmond Regional Planning District Commission and will include evaluation of the highest and best use for property in the area.
